essentially for the maintenance of our nower, and when we spoke of Indian interests we meant our own interests as the ruling power in India. Nor was there any reason to be ashemed of this, for our Indian Government was a paternal government, and the best interests of our Indian enbjects were bound up with the strength and maintenance of our rule." Surely if this is so, and in the second proposition we . cordially agree, it cannot be true that if the people of India had any moderately remonable representatives they would be opposed to such military expenditure as is necessary to the maintenance of our Government. Nor do we believe that in fact they are opposed to it. They know perfectly well that if the English Government spent nothing on soldiers there would in a very few days or weeks be an unlimited military expenditure of another kind by every native prince, chief, and adventurer from one end of the country to the other, and that such an expenditure would be incalculably more burdensome than our taxation, whilst it would simply destroy that security for life and property which the population at present enjoys. Surely it is a great metake to use language which implies anything so mischievous as that the English Government in India not only rests upon militery force (which ue doubt it does), but that it is unpopular with the great bulk of the native. population, and maintained in opposition to their wishes, which certainly is not an ascertained thing. Passing from the broad principles which were pecasionally and incidentally referred to by the different speakers to the comparatively narrow issue which was decided by the deliate itself, it appears to us that the Government and Mr. Hadslone were right, and Mr. Fawcett and his supporters mistaken, in the matter. It seems to us that it is little better than political puritinism to object to the employment of India troops for such a purpose as the one new promeasure. or its subsequent ratification of it, being always presumed. No answer was or indeed could be given to the argument. that the proposed arrangement would not cost the people of India one shilling. They would have had under any circumstances to: pay for the troops during the whole period of. their service. They are to be paid for all other expenses, and if it should become necessary to replace the troops removed from India the cost is to be paid by this country, so that in no event will the Indian revenue have to meet any iner-med expenditure whatever. The whole effect of the arrangement will be that a certain proportion of the India army will be sent upon a particular expolition in, which both officers and men are not only willing, but auxious to be t employed. What reasonable objection can there he to this! Mr. taing's rather unlucky, planse about keeping the Bombay army in wird supplied Mr. Bernal Oshorne with material for a few jokes, but in fact they all fell flat, for neither Mr. Lang nor any one else has been so absurd as to propose that the war should be undertaken for any such purpose. What Mr. Laing dil say upon the subject and the observation appears to us a very just one—is to that leaving determined upon the war upon other grounds, it is well to employ Indian forces in order to keep them in a state of efficiency. Those who u appear to us to fall into the error of regarding England and India as two unrelated inde-predent Powers, each having its own interests and hearing its own burdens. This surely is a ly great mistake. . . . . . were we are glad to see that all the speakers who are had commion to touch upon the subject joined ien; in compliatic protests against the scheme which in some quarters has been imputed to our Golay tests we should have thought were hardly nethe cessary. Whatever may have been our policy of in former times, unnexation of late years has site almost invariably been regarded in the light of min an inevitable misfortime, and a source of weakand ness rather than strength. Of course the opposite may be and is maintained by certain for writers who appears to feel a malignant plea-und sure in depreciating their country, but it re-quires a wonderfully strong opinion as to the omnivorous character of English ambition to suppose that we entertain any such design on that the present occasion. To annex Abyssinia with that a view to taking Egypt in the rear would prehably be to provoke a general European war on for the most important of all the questions which the still remain outstanding. To annex it for any true other purpose would be simply abouted; and we ered do not believe that such a policy is at all likely for to be adopted.

Maximilian in Mexico.

(From the " Times.") The less that any one who takes up these nets volumes knows of Mexico the more interesting. ore they will prove for they both contain sketches vat of Maxicun life and history, familiar enough to those who have a previous knowledge of the affairs of the Kepublic, but new, probably, to the general reader. Mr. Felton's book is a lively and agreeable record of some rather nime. less wanderings in Mexico, at a time when many Tou little glimpses into Mexican life, which are sufficiently amoring to make his chapters worth. It the time it takes to read them. The narrative ased of the Countess Paula Follouitz is of greater interest on account of the position she held at one the Court of the ill-fated Imperial couple who in the space of three years, passed through every variety of viciositide which relieves or ure darkens human life. The Countess svinces, it nur. is true, a four inces for small details of her ex-(ish, share with her, and she dwells with unprofitable care upon descriptions of personal sensations fter under circumstances which are notoriously unhing pleasant. The authoress was a devetor at the second control of the second control Ment upon the Empress, and every incident she reater lares in connexion with that unfortunate lady was is calculated to increase the pity which the range civilized world has felt for her heavy sorrows. When an event is decided, and instead of the we mysteries of the future we have to deal with the e are fucts of history, it is easy for a writer to make about us believe that he had a presentiment of all that was to follow. But the Countess Faula year Kullenitz published her book before the tragedy extra of the Austrian rule in Mexico was consum-
